From the 8th century until their immigration to Israel following the establishment of the State, the Moroccan Jewish community of Fez sustained itself socially, religiously and economically. Particular attention is focused on communal life as well as family life in the Mellah, the Jewish ghetto. In the second part, Salonica, the focus is on the Jewish community's cultural achievements as well as the livelihood of the population, which revolved mainly around the port. In its heyday, before the war, close to 80,000 Jews lived here. Here, we observe the life of a Jewish family in this Greek port through a child's eyes. |      |        |       |
